B. Building on Students' Assets (TPE 1)
This lesson builds on students' prior knowledge of their class novel, Charlotte's Web, and thinking of actions as verbs. It incorporates cultural capital and funds of knowledge by allowing students to choose their own words to contribute to the lesson that can relate to their own lives and backgrounds, particularly looking at their morning routines.

Part 3: Instructional Sequence - Engaging Students in the Learning Process

Language support and/or discourse structures

Checking for Understanding strategies - how and when are these happening

Supports for students with specific learning needs

Warmup/ Opener (2 mins)	"This morning, before I got to school, I brushed my teeth, ate breakfast, and packed my lunch. I actually do this every morning before school! These are all part of my morning routine, which means I do these actions over and over again. You might also do some of the same things every day before school. Take a few seconds to think about what you did this morning before getting to school. [give quiet think time]. I am going to give you 1 minute to share with a partner: What happens during your morning routine before you get to school?" - give students 1 minute to share with each other
Body (15 mins)	"We just read Chapter 2 of our class novel, Charlotte's Web. We are going to discuss some of the language in the book. This can help you understand the book when you read on your own. When we were reading, I noticed this sentence: [show completed sentence on sentence strip and read sentence out loud] "Every morning, as soon as she got up, she warmed his milk, tied his bib on, and held the bottle for him" (Charlotte's Web, ch 2, p. 8) Let's read this sentence together. Repeat after me." - call and response choral reading. chunk sentence into Every morning / as soon as she got up / she warmed his milk / tied his bib on / and held the bottle for him "This sentence is talking about Fern's morning routine. We are going to make up our own sentences like this one by filling in some blanks. Look at this sentence frame: [place sentence frame sentence strip below original sentence and read it out loud] Every morning, as soon as she got up, she [blank], [blank], and [blank]. Let's read this sentence together. Repeat after me." - call and response choral reading "Let's look at the words that we took out of the sentence. What do you notice about these words: warmed, tied, held" - point out the three words in the sentence "Do you see any patterns between these three words? Talk to a partner" - give students 30 seconds to discuss with a partner. Then ask for volunteers to share what they discussed "These are all action words. They describe something that you do. These action words are all in the past tense. That means they happened in the past, before right now. How could you use these same words in the present tense?" - give students 30 seconds to discuss with a partner. Then ask for volunteers to share what they discussed

	"If we tried to use the present tense in this sentence, it would not match." - give example with present tense of verbs (non-example) "so, we need to make sure our actions are written in past tense!" "I want you to think back to what you shared before about YOUR morning routine. Try to think of 3 different actions that you do in the morning. Once you have thought of those actions, I want you to write each word down on its own yellow post-it note. For example, in the original sentence, I would write warmed on a post it, tied on a post it, and held on a post it" [model this on post its] "remember, these actions all happened before right now, so they should be in the past tense" - give students time to fill out their post its - have students share their yellow post its. place them in vertical lines underneath the blank in the sentence frame, with each row pertaining to one student - read out the students' sentences so far as they share their verbs - ask students to check if these words make sense: are they an action? are they in past tense? "What is missing from our sentences? Let's look at the original sentence again" - go back to original sentence and have students point out "his milk," "his bib," and "the bottle for him" "These pieces all tell us more about Fern's actions. "His milk" tells us what Fern warmed up. "His bib" tells us what Fern tied. And "the bottle for him" tells us what Fern held." - write these noun phrases on blue post its as you explain each one "Now it is your turn. I want you to think of what things or objects you could write to go with your action words. When you have thought of them, write each one down on its own blue post it" - give students time to fill out their post its - have students share their blue post its. place them in vertical lines underneath the blank in the sentence frame, with each row pertaining to one student - read out the students' sentences so far as they share their completed sentences - ask students to check if these words make sense: do they go with the actions? do they tell us more about the action? "Do you think we could switch any of these words with each other?" - let students share their ideas about which words to switch and move post-its around to reflect their ideas "Let's try to make the silliest sentence. Which words would you put in the blanks?" - let students share their ideas about which words to switch and move post-its around to reflect their ideas "What if we wanted to make the most boring morning routine. Which words would we use?" - let students share their ideas about which words to switch and move post-its around to reflect their ideas
Closure (3 mins)	"Which type of words did we write on the yellow post-its?" - action words "When did these actions happen?" - in the past "Which type of words did we write on the blue post-its?"

	- things or objects that tell us more about the action words "I want you to write another sentence like this one with this sentence frame. You can use these post-its as inspiration, if you would like" - give students a half sheet of paper to write their exit ticket sentence. Leave sentence strips and post-its out as examples for them to base their sentences on "Thank you for participating today! As you go through your week, you can think about the verbs you would use to describe your morning routine or even the morning routine of a friend or a family member!"
